- 2. Claims 1-13, 16-18, 29 and 30 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Krishnamurthy (US 5,508,043).

Krishnamurthy discloses a controlled release matrix that comprises active agents (abstract, column 3, lines 3-5) such as anti-histamines, analgesics, anti-inflammatory agents, gastro-intestinals and anti-emetics, anti-epileptics, vasodilators, anti-tussive agents and expectorants, anti-asthmatics, hormones, diuretics, anti-hypotensives, bronchodilators, anti-inflammatory steroids, antibiotics, psychotropics, anti-diarrheals, mucolytics, sedatives, decongestants, laxatives, antacids, vitamins, stimulants and appetite suppressants (column 7, lines 34-56). The controlled release matrix comprises pharmaceutically acceptable sodium alginate (abstract and column 3) and for tablets and caplets, the matrix also contains generally accepted pharmaceutical lubricants and waxes or fats, magnesium stearate and calcium phosphate (column 6, lines 16-37 and 59-63 and examples 9-11).

The prior art, Krishnamurthy is directed to a controlled release matrix that employed as a delivery matrix for a number of drugs including psychotropic drugs. Krishnamurthy does not exclude any psychotropic agent and thus the matrix of Krishnamurthy can be used with all psychotropic drugs. Fluoxetine is a psychotropic drug. Thus regarding instant claim 8, Fluoxetine-HCl, a psychotropic drug, can also be used with the matrix of the prior art.

Krishnamurthy discloses the caplet composition of the instant claims except that Krishnamurthy is silent on the dimension of the capsule. However, caplets by their nature and design have dimensions of length and diameter and it is within the purview of one of ordinary skill in the art to be able to measure the length and diameter of the caplet. However, it appears to the examiner that the dimensions of the caplet does nothing additional to the caplet dosage form since there is no comparable example to demonstrate that the diameter or length of the caplet provides unusual results. Regarding instant claims 4 and 5, one can substitute one erodible polymer with another with the expectation that the polymer will have controlled release properties. Thus, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to prepare the caplet dosage form of Krishnamurthy where the dosage form comprises active agent, lubricant and sodium alginate. One having ordinary skill in the art would have been motivated to measure the diameter and length of the caplet in order to determine the dimensions of the caplet.

Response to Arguments

- 3. Applicants' arguments filed 10/27/03 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.
- 4. Applicants argue that Krishnamurthy uses a combination of sodium alginate and calcium salt while in the instant claims a "list of water soluble and water insoluble erodible polymers" can be used. It is noted that claims 3 and 5 while providing lists of water-soluble and water insoluble erodible polymers also selects one from the list provided and as such the prior art only needs to teach one of the erodible polymers recited in the said claims. Also the argument that the calcium salt in the prior art is essential for cross-linking with the alginate is an argument for intended use in a composition claim, the requirement is that the prior art teach the composition and in this case the prior art does. Regarding the argument over the size of the instant caplet, there is no demonstration that the specific size recited for the caplet provides unusual results or characteristics over the caplet of Krishnamurthy in light of the fact that all caplets, by virtue of the unique shapes have certain dimensions of length and diameter. In the absence of a showing of criticality, the dimensions recited for the instant caplet is not inventive over the caplet of
